Nas Yassin, a Palestinian-Israeli born in Arraba, grew up speaking Arabic, Hebrew, and English. He attended Harvard University on a full scholarship, graduating in 2014 with degrees in economics and computer science. After working as a software coder for Venmo, Nas decided to leave his job and travel the world, documenting his adventures on Facebook under the name "Nas Daily". The page became an overnight sensation, attracting 12 million followers and 4.5 billion video views over 1,000 days. Nas continues to post videos weekly from Singapore, where he's launching a media company with friends. He credits his fans for believing in him, and reflects on the idea that if we could dream any dream each night, what would it be? You would fulfill all of your wishes in a dream world where everything is at its best. Every night you would have an incredible experience with unlimited pleasure. However, after some time, you start to crave for something more exciting and unpredictable. You begin to dream about unexpected events that could happen to you without knowing what's going to happen next. As the adventures get riskier, your dreams become bolder and wilder. — Paraphrased from Alan Watts, "The Dream of Life" I found myself on Easter Island, surrounded by sixty-three square miles of breathtaking beauty. It was a surreal experience, as if everything in my life had led me to this precise moment. I'd been told it was an amazing place to visit, but no travel brochure could prepare me for the sensory overload that hit me like a wave. The wind, surf, and stunning natural scenery knocked me off balance, leaving me feeling awestruck. As I stood there, I couldn't help but exclaim, "This is incredible!" My Canon digital camera captured my enthusiasm as I explored the island over two and a half days of pure euphoria. My breathless commentary was punctuated by one stunning shot after another – angry waves crashing against deep-red cliffs, time-lapse footage of fat clouds tearing across mountain ridges, wild horses grazing in fields of golden grass, and panoramic views of the countless hills carpeted in soft green vegetation. And then, there were the moai – Easter Island's iconic human head sculptures carved by the Rapa Nui people nearly eight centuries ago. Standing guard on the island's perimeter, these monolithic behemoths faced inward to protect their inhabitants. There are 887 of them in total, with the largest rising 71 feet into the air.
